Editorial

The 5th European Melanoma Meeting, which will be held in Marseille in June 2013, will bring together melanoma researchers from throughout the world and will cover all the aspect of melanoma research, from basic molecular and cellular aspects to the evaluation of the preclinical concepts.

The driving force behind this meeting is the shared mission of the scientists and physicians to advance progress against melanoma. As exciting strides have been made in the field of melanoma research and treatment, our program aims to present essential minute information combined with engrossing discussions for cancer research professionals, including basic scientists, clinicians and industrials.

We are proud to welcome some of the most influential opinion leaders in the field of melanoma who will put a special emphasis on the problem of melanoma resistance, to current treatments and on the recent groundbreaking concepts that will allow the advent of the next generation of treatments for melanoma.
